Message from the Guest Editor

Autoinflammation, as a relatively new field in clinical rheumatology, has gained increasing importance in recent years. Nevertheless, there is still an urgent medical need, especially in the recognition of syndromes of undifferentiated recurrent fever and reliable outcome measures, for the confirmation of data from controlled clinical trials, in addition to data from registers regarding patients' long-term experiences.

The Special Issue entitled “Systemic Autoinflammatory Diseases—Clinical Rheumatic Challenges Series 2” of the Journal of Clinical Medicine is now open for submissions. This Special Issue welcomes all types of papers on the broad spectrum of clinical characteristics, prognosis, pathophysiology, and treatment of autoinflammatory diseases. The goal of this Special Issue is to further raise awareness of autoinflammatory processes and to better separate them from well-established autoimmune diseases. It is clear that we have entered a new age in this complex field, as rheumatology is increasingly linked to immunology.
