Message from the Guest Editor

Fundus diseases mainly include lesions of the retina, optic nerve, vitreum, etc., and can lead to irreversible visual impairment without timely diagnosis and appropriate treatment. Their early detection and diagnosis can reduce the incidence of severe vision loss and improve the efficiency of treatment. Fundus imaging, a noninvasive diagnosis method, was an initial and widely used model for analyzing fundus diseases; at present, fundus imaging techniques are developing in a world field, microview, multimodal, quantitative, and intelligent way.

The goal of this Special Issue of JCM is to provide a platform to present the current trends in pathophysiology, clinical presentation and imaging, differential diagnosis, and treatment regarding fundus diseases.
