Message from the Guest Editors

The area of glomerular diseases is changing and research that aims to gain insight into the pathogenesis, diagnosis, and complications of, treatment approaches to, or therapeutic measures for the underlying disease is on the increase.

This Special Issue welcomes articles either highlighting recent developments in or providing new experimental (in vitro or animal model) or clinical (human) data related to glomerular diseases. We would appreciate it if the authors provided a brief section in their manuscript indicating the novelty of their findings or, in the case of review articles, provided personal views on a particular topic (e.g., treatment of recurrent glomerulonephritis after kidney transplantation).

In summary, we are happy to host this Special Issue and welcome solicited and unsolicited submissions that will contribute to its success.
