Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

Maxillofacial surgery has expanded its fields of interest in recent decades from traumatology to head and neck oncology, from preprosthetic surgery to reconstructive microsurgery, from malformative surgery to endoscopy of paranasal sinuses and skull base, covering a wide spectrum of problems and sectoralizing in each specific area.

Huge steps forward have been made in every area, from diagnosis to treatment.

Multidisciplinary work and collaboration with different specialists, oncologists, radiotherapists, radiologists, pathologists, dentists, ophthalmologists, ENT specialists, and dermatologists, has become common clinical practice, leading to a substantial improvement in results.

The aim of this Special Issue is to discuss these innovations and future opportunities in the different areas of interest of maxillofacial surgery in the form of original articles, reviews, or in other forms.
