Message from the Guest Editors

Heart failure represents a significant medical condition. The proper evaluation and treatment of heart failure are important to improve quality of life and extend survival.

In this Special Issue we would like to focus on the comprehensive evaluation and management of heart failure, including non-pharmacological therapy, like heart surgery, electrophysiology procedures, device implantation, and percutaneous coronary interventions, starting with ethical concerns and moving to practical issues.

We also wish to integrate the role of clinical medicine's assistance and its function in adhering to social-distancing guidelines, and we would like to invite the submission of research articles and reviews.
