Message from the Guest Editor

At the end of the 2020, the first volume of Special Issue “Cardiovascular Imaging: Opportunities and Challenges in Clinical Application” was released, we received many excellent papers.

https://www.mdpi.com/journal/jcm/special_issues/Cardiovascular_Imaging_Application Imaging has long been and will continue to be an integral part of clinical cardiovascular medicine. The depth of information that can be obtained from non-invasive cardiovascular imaging continues to expand. Increasing numbers of clinical decisions are being made without intervention given the various non-invasive cardiovascular imaging methods available. Each imaging modality assesses cardiovascular conditions from a particular perspective. The relatively new multimodality approach offers multiple perspectives and thus the possibility of a better understanding of disease status and processes. For this volume, potential topics including but not limited to: echocardiography cardiovascular magnetic resonance imaging cardiovascular computed tomography imaging nuclear cardiology imaging stress test with imaging multimodality cardiovascular imaging
