New Advances in the Management of Cardiac Arrest and Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue aims to bring together cutting-edge research and clinical studies focused on improving outcomes for patients experiencing cardiac arrest both inside and outside the hospital setting. Emphasizing innovative approaches in prehospital care, advanced resuscitation techniques, and post-resuscitation management, we seek contributions that explore new methodologies, technologies, and protocols designed to enhance survival and neurological recovery. Additionally, we welcome clinical research that delves into the underlying mechanisms of cardiac arrest and resuscitation, providing a deeper understanding of the related necessary processes involved. We encourage submissions of original research and reviews that provide insights into the multifaceted challenges and advancements in this critical area of emergency medicine.
