New Insights in Neonatal Intensive Care

Message from the Guest Editors

The progress in neonatal intensive care has been remarkable in recent years, improving outcomes for even the smallest and most vulnerable infants. As advancements in neuroprotective strategies, respiratory care, hemodynamic support, point-of-care imaging, vascular access, nutrition, infection control, developmental support, etc., continue to reshape the landscape of neonatal care, our everyday challenge as clinicians and researchers is to customize evidence-based practice for individual patients to promote the best possible outcomes for premature and critically ill infants. In this Special Issue, we welcome authors to submit papers on the advances in neonatal intensive care in terms of the understanding of pathogenesis of neonatal diseases, diagnosis, and management.
