Clinical Insights into Immune Cell Markers in Cancer

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue, entitled "Clinical Insights into Immune Cell Markers in Cancer", explores the crucial role of immune cell markers in understanding and managing cancer. Currently, there are a limited number of immune markers that can predict responses or resistance to immunotherapy-based treatments. This Special Issue aims to bridge the gap in biomarkers that can elucidate the complex interactions between cancer cells and the immune system. Additionally, it examines the application of these markers in diagnostic processes and their potential as therapeutic targets, especially in the era of personalized medicine and immunotherapy. By focusing on innovative research and recent advances, this Special Issue seeks to enhance our understanding of tumor immunology and improve patient outcomes through better predictive tools and more targeted treatment strategies.
