Advances in Thrombosis and Haemostasis

Message from the Guest Editor

Excessive activation of the blood coagulation system can cause thrombosis. However, new medical knowledge has changed the classical paradigm, making it increasingly apparent that the type of thrombosis associated with inflammation (thromboinflammation or immunothrombosis) often occurs in a broad range of vascular diseases, such as venous thromboembolism (VTE), atherosclerosis, and stroke. Importantly, recent studies have identified factors that contribute to thrombosis but not necessarily to haemostasis. The recent experiences of the COVID-19 pandemic also highlight the pathologic interplay between coagulation and immunity. From this perspective, this Special Issue wants to provide a comprehensive review of the current knowledge on immunothrombotic processes relevant to different clinical conditions, as the recent advances in our understanding of the drivers of immunothrombosis provide new opportunities for the development of safer anticoagulant drugs. We are looking forward to receiving your contributions.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

There has been an explosion of gene and target based research and therapeutics in the multitude of fields that compose clinical medicine. The Journal of Clinical Medicine's (JCM) staff and editorial board are dedicated to providing cutting edge, timely, and peer-reviewed articles covering the diverse subspecialties of clinical medicine. The journal publishes concise, innovative, and exciting research articles as well as clinically significant articles and reviews that are pertinent to the myriad of disciplines within medicine. The articles published are relevant to both primary care physicians and specialists. The journal's full-texts are archived in PubMed Central and indexed in PubMed. Please consider submitting your manuscripts for publication to our journal and check us out on-line!
