Diagnostic and Therapeutic Pathways in Cardiac Heart Failure

Message from the Guest Editors

Heart failure (HF) remains a major global health challenge, with increasing prevalence due to an aging population and improved survival of individuals with cardiovascular diseases. Despite significant advances, many aspects of HF diagnosis and management still present substantial challenges. We invite researchers in the field of cardiology to share their latest work exploring innovative diagnostic and therapeutic pathways in heart failure. Your research can help shape the future of heart failure care, improving patient outcomes and advancing our understanding of this complex disease. Please submit your contributions; we look forward to your insight.
