Corneal Surgery: From Innovation to Clinical Practice

Message from the Guest Editor

Corneal surgery—especially lamellar keratoplasty—has become a routine procedure for many ophthalmologists. The growing popularity of these techniques requires comprehensive knowledge not only regarding eye banking and surgical methods but regarding postoperative care as well. Moreover, the recent advances in corneal surgery are genuinely astounding, ranging from novel biomaterials and synthetic materials to advanced laser platforms and innovative ophthalmic surgical techniques. The different subtypes of allogeneic corneal transplants show the ever-increasing use of a single-donor cornea for multiple procedures. We invite cornea specialists, residents, general ophthalmologists, optometrists, clinical scientists in vision research to contribute articles to this Special Issue. We welcome retrospective and prospective studies and reviews on novel corneal surgeries, perioperative care and eye banking.
