Recent Advances in Gynecological Cancer

Message from the Guest Editor

The field of gynecologic cancer has seen an increase in the number of novel therapeutics, resulting in clinically meaningful improvements for patients across a range of diseases. The integration of innovative approaches such as immunotherapy and targeted therapies has opened new therapeutic possibilities, particularly for endometrial and cervical cancers. Similarly, the use of PARP inhibitors for ovarian cancer has revolutionized treatment efficacy in patients with BRCA mutations and homologous recombination deficiency. In this Special Issue, we welcome authors to contribute articles exploring these new therapeutic frontiers, delving into treatment personalization, innovations in patient selection, and the future challenges in gynecological oncology research. Keywords:

- ovarian cancer
- endometrial cancer
- cervical cancer
- clinical trials
- ADCs
- PARPi
