Progress in Diagnosis and Treatment of Primary Immunodeficiencies

Message from the Guest Editor

Primary immunodeficiencies (PIDs) are a heterogeneous group of >400 disorders that are often associated with recurrent, opportunistic or severe infections and various autoimmune manifestations. Improved recognition of PIDs and advances in molecular diagnostics have led to a significant increase in the number of individual PIDs that are currently being recognized. Despite a significant expansion in our knowledge in recent years, there remain significant gaps in our understanding of their pathogenesis and potential treatments. The aim of this Special Issue is to present the most recent developments and future prospects on the diagnosis and treatment of this diverse group of disorders.
