

Special Issue

Targeted Treatment of Oral Cancer

Message from the Guest Editors

Oral cancer is a significant global health concern, with increasing incidence rates and diverse treatment approaches. The Special Issue focuses on targeted treatment strategies that aim to improve therapeutic outcomes while minimizing adverse effects. By exploring personalized medicine approaches and innovative therapeutic modalities, this Special Issue aims to contribute to the advancement of clinical practice in oral cancer treatment. The Special Issue invites original research articles and reviews that cover a wide range of topics related to the targeted treatment of oral cancer. We encourage submissions that address the following areas:

- Novel therapeutic agents and drug delivery systems;
- Immunotherapy and its role in oral cancer treatment;
- Combination therapies and their synergistic effects.

We hope that this collection of articles will facilitate the development of more effective and personalized treatment strategies, ultimately improving patient outcomes in the field of oral oncology.
