

Special Issue

Current Trends in Hand Surgery

Message from the Guest Editors

Practitioners in hand surgery strive for excellence and have transformed this field in small increments over recent years. These changes show a trend towards minimally invasive procedures for common pathologies, which increase patient comfort and minimise side effects. Examples include arthroscopic and sonography-controlled procedures or customized small free tissue transfers. Currently, well-trained hand surgeons are applying orthopaedic, plastic, and microsurgical techniques and conservative treatments to improve outcomes. We invite researchers and clinicians to contribute to this Special Issue and share the latest developments in the reconstruction and improvement of hand functions.
