Pancreatic Cancer: Recent Advances and Future Challenges

Message from the Guest Editors

Pancreatic cancer is a lethal disease with the poorest survival rate of any solid malignancy, incidence and mortality rates for pancreatic cancer have continued to rise during the past two decades. Due to these advances in multi-modality care, treatment indications and options have expanded even for patients with locally advanced, oligometastatic or recurrent disease. On the other hand, these improvements add to the complexity of providing multi-disciplinary treatment for pancreatic cancer patients. This multi-modality care opens the door to new strategies and innovations related to, for instance, artificial intelligence (AI), neoadjuvant and adjuvant therapies, robotic surgery, radiation therapy and immune therapy. To work towards truly personalized care for pancreatic cancer, we need improved tools for patient and treatment selection, superior biomarkers and radiomics to measure treatment response and novel therapies that target tumor-specific genetic vulnerabilities. We cordially invite you to submit your original or review article on clinical or translational research to this Special Issue of JCM.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

There has been an explosion of gene and target based research and therapeutics in the multitude of fields that compose clinical medicine. The Journal of Clinical Medicine's (JCM) staff and editorial board are dedicated to providing cutting edge, timely, and peer-reviewed articles covering the diverse subspecialties of clinical medicine. The journal publishes concise, innovative, and exciting research articles as well as clinically significant articles and reviews that are pertinent to the myriad of disciplines within medicine. The articles published are relevant to both primary care physicians and specialists. The journal's full-texts are archived in PubMed Central and indexed in PubMed. Please consider submitting your manuscripts for publication to our journal and check us out on-line!
