Cancer Stem Cells and Cellular Therapies in Cancer: Advances and Clinical Prospects

Message from the Guest Editors

The Special Issue “Cancer Stem Cells and Cellular Therapies in Cancer: Advances and Clinical Prospects” is devoted to presenting state-of-the-art progress and addressing enduring challenges in the elucidation and therapeutic targeting of cancer stem cells (CSCs). CSCs constitute a distinct subpopulation of tumor cells that play a central role in tumor initiation, progression, metastasis, and the development of therapeutic resistance. Despite substantial advances in oncology, the persistence of CSCs continues to pose a major impediment to the achievement of durable remission and long-term disease control.

By bringing together researchers from the fields of oncology, immunology, molecular biology, and regenerative medicine, this Special Issue aims to foster cross-disciplinary collaboration, accelerate the clinical translation of CSC-targeted and cell-based therapeutic strategies, and advance collective efforts toward surmounting one of the most intractable challenges in contemporary oncology.
