Current Advances in Acute Coronary Syndrome

Message from the Guest Editors

Individual risk stratification and management of acute coronary syndrome remains a daily challenge due to the wide spectrum of clinical presentations. Clinical guidelines and recommendations have changed substantially in the last decade due to the growing evidence provided by randomized clinical trials involving patients with ST-elevation and non-ST-elevation acute coronary syndromes. Nonetheless, many aspects still remain unsolved and should be investigated in real-world clinical registries. This Special Issue aims to provide compelling evidence related to the most significant challenges in the context of acute coronary syndromes.
