Advancements in Individualized Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery: Second Edition

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue explores the evolving clinical landscape of individualized plastic and reconstructive surgery, focusing on translating personalized approaches into practical, evidence-based care. In recent years, patient-specific surgical planning has advanced rapidly, driven by innovations in imaging, microsurgery, and biological customization. This edition highlights clinical research addressing current challenges, unmet needs, and solutions in tailoring reconstructive and aesthetic procedures to individual patient profiles, aiming to improve outcomes, safety, and patient satisfaction. We invite contributions covering a broad range of topics, including individualized soft tissue reconstruction, flap surgery, autologous tissue transplantation, digital surgical planning, and applications of regenerative medicine and biomaterials. This Special Issue encourages the sharing of clinical experience, case series, and outcome-driven research that strengthen the evidence base for personalized approaches. Interdisciplinary perspectives are also welcome.
