Clinical Management of Limb Ischemia

Message from the Guest Editor

Patients with limb ischemia are the most symptomatic in the vascular scenario, so are limited in their daily activity and suffer from incoercible pain, discomfort, and restless nights. Still, their poor condition seems to be faced by most vascular specialists with a sense of resigned disenchantment, likely because of the complex treatment these patients sometime should undergo, and their poor prognosis. Furthermore, there seems to be a diffuse but wrong opinion that limb loss is not correlated with death. Therefore, limb salvage still looks like a second class procedure, at least compared to other vascular operations, surely more exciting in the short term. The aim is to avoid a major amputation, focusing on some concepts we should deal with when facing a patient with limb ischemia.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

There has been an explosion of gene and target based research and therapeutics in the multitude of fields that compose clinical medicine. The Journal of Clinical Medicine's (JCM) staff and editorial board are dedicated to providing cutting edge, timely, and peer-reviewed articles covering the diverse subspecialties of clinical medicine. The journal publishes concise, innovative, and exciting research articles as well as clinically significant articles and reviews that are pertinent to the myriad of disciplines within medicine. The articles published are relevant to both primary care physicians and specialists. The journal's full-texts are archived in PubMed Central and indexed in PubMed. Please consider submitting your manuscripts for publication to our journal and check us out on-line!
