Emerging Trends and Innovations in Restorative Dentistry: Advances in Clinical Practice

Message from the Guest Editor

Restorative dentistry has been considered an essential component of dental medical care, developing to suit patients' changing requirements and the constantly growing capabilities of advancements in research. The Special Issue, "Emerging Trends and Innovations in Restorative Dentistry: Advances in Clinical Practice," symbolizes a collaborative commitment to improving the discipline and knowledge of restorative dentistry. Researchers are encouraged to investigate the intriguing junction of scientific advances and their everyday applicability. Subjects include the incorporation of computerized procedures into prosthodontics, the clinical application of emerging materials that integrate longevity and esthetic performance, and the increasing popularity of less-invasive techniques that respect dental maintenance. Artificial intelligence is changing diagnostic evaluation and treatment planning. By offering scientific knowledge and useful suggestions, we hope to assist healthcare providers, investigators, and professionals in overcoming the challenges and gathering the potential associated with these developments.
