

Special Issue

Current Progress in Inflammatory Bowel Disease (IBD)

Message from the Guest Editors

Many research endeavors have focused on inflammatory events in the gastrointestinal tract, leading to an improved understanding of its pathogenesis. Such advances will hopefully lead to the advent of new therapies and continue to refine the evaluations used within current interventions. Such progress should, in due course, lead to enhanced outcomes of individuals diagnosed with ulcerative colitis, Crohn disease and other inflammatory conditions in the gut. MDPI invites investigators involved in the study of inflammatory bowel disease (IBD) to contribute to this Special Issue of the Journal of Clinical Medicine, which is fully dedicated to IBD. Original research or high-quality reviews are welcome within any field of IBD research and clinical management.
