Aortic Diseases and Complications: Diagnosis and Treatment

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue, "Aortic Diseases and Complications: Diagnosis and Treatment", presents the latest research on the diagnosis and treatment management of aortic diseases and their complications. The Special Issue covers key themes, including aortic aneurysms, dissections, and valve disorders, and focuses on the latest diagnostic techniques, imaging post-processing, and open surgical or endovascular interventions. The papers also discuss the challenges of managing aortic diseases in high-risk Marfan syndrome and associated diseases. The research in this Special Issue emphasizes the need for early detection and intervention to prevent complications and improve patient outcomes. The papers presented here contribute significantly to the advancement of knowledge in the field of aortic diseases and provide valuable insights for clinicians and researchers alike. With this Special Issue, we want to provide a platform for scientists to publish their new scientific findings in the area of aortic diseases and complications to further progress this important topic in the field of diagnostics and therapy.
