Basics, Epidemiology, Diagnosis, and Management of Liver Tumor

Message from the Guest Editors

The knowledge and understanding of basic and clinical information for the diagnosis and therapeutic management of liver tumors are essential for physicians to make correct diagnoses and therapeutic decisions. This knowledge contributes to establishing new research plans to develop novel diagnostic markers, methodologies, and therapy. For this purpose, we invite investigators to contribute original research articles, systematic reviews, mini-review articles, and case reports that will stimulate the continuing efforts to understand the basics and clinics of liver tumors and share knowledge for improving patient care. The tumors include benign and malignant liver tumors, such as hepatocellular carcinoma, intrahepatic bile duct cancer, metastatic liver tumor, hepatic lymphomas, hemangioma, focal nodular hyperplasia, adenoma, angiomyolipoma, epithelioid hemangioendothelioma, etc.
