

Special Issue

New Trends and Advances in Treatment Headache Disorders

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue of the Journal of Clinical Medicine will contain original and review papers concerning novel concepts on headache pathophysiology and origin and focus on current and future targets in headache treatments. Researchers involved in the field are invited to contribute with their significant expertise; additionally, the issue will include invited contributions from world-leading experts, who will contribute on how to best manage headache patients and offer their view on the missing links in disease biology and whether, given the availability of new and effective treatments for migraine, further investigations on novel targets and novel treatments are still needed.
