Emerging Research in Cancer Survivorship

Message from the Guest Editor

Cancer survivorship research is advancing rapidly, driven by the growing availability of real-world data, improved clinical epidemiology study designs, and emerging analytic tools. By applying rigorous epidemiologic methods to clinically relevant questions, this field plays a pivotal role in improving cancer treatment and, importantly, long-term survivorship. This Special Issue focuses on innovative research at the intersection of clinical epidemiology and oncology, with an emphasis on cancer survivorship science, from diagnosis until the end of life. We welcome studies that examine the physical, psychosocial, and health system factors affecting survivors, and those that demonstrate methodological rigor and real-world impact.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

There has been an explosion of gene and target based research and therapeutics in the multitude of fields that compose clinical medicine. The Journal of Clinical Medicine's (JCM) staff and editorial board are dedicated to providing cutting edge, timely, and peer-reviewed articles covering the diverse subspecialties of clinical medicine. The journal publishes concise, innovative, and exciting research articles as well as clinically significant articles and reviews that are pertinent to the myriad of disciplines within medicine. The articles published are relevant to both primary care physicians and specialists. The journal's full-texts are archived in PubMed Central and indexed in PubMed. Please consider submitting your manuscripts for publication to our journal and check us out on-line!
