Treatment of Obstructive Sleep Apnea: State-of-the-Art and Future Directions

Message from the Guest Editors

Obstructive sleep apnea (OSA) is recurrent upper airway obstruction caused by a loss of upper airway muscle tone during sleep, which leads to intermittent hypoxia and sleep fragmentation. We invite investigators to contribute original research articles (including animal and human studies; clinical studies will be given priority), as well as review articles, that will stimulate continuing efforts to develop better therapies for OSA. Potential topics may include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Novel aspects of CPAP treatment and interventions to improve CPAP adherence;
- Oral appliances in OSA: state-of-the-art;
- Hypoglossal nerve stimulation: novel approaches;
- Emerging pharmacotherapy of OSA;
- Pre-clinical studies of novel therapeutics in OSA;
- Treatment of OSA in children.
