Sarcoma—Clinical Updates

Message from the Guest Editor

Advanced scientific techniques, improvement in collaborative research, and a focus on histologic-specific investigation has led to exciting recent discoveries, paving the way for improved diagnosis and prognostication and the development of novel therapeutics such as targeted molecular therapies and immunotherapies. However, more work is still required to understand the patients and tumors for which these existing therapies most benefit and how best to further investigate and expand these types of therapeutics to improve outcomes for broader populations of sarcoma patients. The aim of this Special Issue is to highlight research that improves our understanding of sarcoma biology and prognostication, identify novel biomarkers and/or therapeutic targets, and investigate treatment strategies that improve oncologic and/or functional outcomes.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

There has been an explosion of gene and target based research and therapeutics in the multitude of fields that compose clinical medicine. The Journal of Clinical Medicine's (JCM) staff and editorial board are dedicated to providing cutting edge, timely, and peer-reviewed articles covering the diverse subspecialties of clinical medicine. The journal publishes concise, innovative, and exciting research articles as well as clinically significant articles and reviews that are pertinent to the myriad of disciplines within medicine. The articles published are relevant to both primary care physicians and specialists. The journal's full-texts are archived in PubMed Central and indexed in PubMed. Please consider submitting your manuscripts for publication to our journal and check us out on-line!
