

Special Issue

Lung Transplantation: Current Challenges and New Perspectives

Message from the Guest Editors

Lung transplantation remains a life-saving intervention for patients with end-stage lung diseases such as idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, cystic fibrosis, and pulmonary arterial hypertension. This Special Issue on lung transplantation brings together leading research and expert perspectives to address critical developments and persistent challenges in the field. The articles featured in this issue will cover a broad range of topics, from innovations in organ preservation and ex vivo lung perfusion to advances in recipient selection. By integrating clinical insights with cutting-edge research, this issue aims to support multidisciplinary teams in optimizing outcomes for lung transplant recipients. The collection provides a valuable resource for clinicians committed to advancing lung transplantation as a sustainable and effective therapy for end-stage lung disease.
