Clinical Advances in Cerebral Aneurysm Treatment

Message from the Guest Editor

The prevalence of cerebral aneurysms (CA) in the healthy adult population is relatively low at 2–3%. At the same time, CA are of high clinicoepidemiological relevance. This Special Issue of the Journal of Clinical Medicine will cover the following important aspects of CA management prior and after CA rupture:

- Prognostic factors for CA development, growth, and rupture;
- Risk–benefit assessment for the treatment of unruptured CA;
- Advances in conservative and invasive management of unruptured CA;
- Initial severity of SAH and early complications after CA rupture;
- Diagnosis and treatment of cerebral vasospasm and delayed cerebral ischemia;
- Management of intracranial pressure after SAH;
- Acute and chronic hydrocephalus after SAH;
- Systemic complications during and neurocritical care management of SAH;

Treating CA in the era of digital technologies: the value of artificial intelligence for the optimization of CA treatment.
