Recent Advances in Rehabilitation of Patients with Multiple Sclerosis (MS)

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue aims to highlight the latest research and innovative approaches in the rehabilitation of patients with Multiple Sclerosis (MS). Contributions will cover a wide range of topics, including:

- Innovative Therapeutic Interventions: exploring cutting-edge therapies, such as neuroplasticity-based approaches and technology-assisted rehabilitation, including virtual reality and robotic devices.
- Multidisciplinary Care Models: examining the effectiveness of integrated care involving neurologists, physical therapists, occupational therapists, and mental health professionals to improve patient outcomes.
- Patient-Centered Approaches: highlighting the importance of personalized rehabilitation plans that consider each patient's unique needs, preferences, and the psychosocial aspects of living with MS.
- Outcome Measurement: reviewing the latest tools and methodologies for assessing rehabilitation effectiveness, including patient-reported outcomes and objective measures of functional improvement.
- Telehealth and Remote Monitoring: investigating the role of telehealth in providing accessible rehabilitation services and monitoring patient progress in real time.
