Recent Progress in Rehabilitation Medicine

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue aims to focus on the recent advances in rehabilitation. Rehabilitation generally aims to "add life to years" by helping patients with impairment to achieve and utilize their full physical, mental and social potential. However, recent growing evidence suggests that rehabilitation for patients with visceral impairment such as renal, cardiac and pulmonary impairment can not only improve exercise performance and health-related quality of life but also increases survival. Therefore, rehabilitation for patients does not simply aim to "add life to years" but to "add life to years and years to life", which is a new rehabilitation concept.

We are soliciting such cutting-edge research reports and overviews, both basic and clinical, in relation to rehabilitation, to offer a promising model for the new field of rehabilitation.
