Advances in Diagnosis and Treatment of Gynecological Malignancies: Part II

Message from the Guest Editor

Medical practice is moving towards personalized medicine by means of next-generation sequencing applied to solid or liquid biopsy. Advances in our understanding of the molecular alterations in various gynecological malignancies have enabled the development of increasingly more precise diagnoses, effective targeted therapies, and the prediction of accurate prognoses in the setting of modern immunotherapies. In addition to histopathology coupled with molecular diagnostics, pretargeting for imaging and therapy is gaining consensus in oncological nuclear medicine; moreover, robotic surgical techniques are now a reality. Following the success of part I of “Advances in Diagnosis and Treatment of Gynecological Malignancies”, part II of this Special Issue is announced here with a renewed goal, but always with the intent to highlight the most recent advances in the full context of diagnosis and treatment of female cancers.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

There has been an explosion of gene and target based research and therapeutics in the multitude of fields that compose clinical medicine. The Journal of Clinical Medicine's (JCM) staff and editorial board are dedicated to providing cutting edge, timely, and peer-reviewed articles covering the diverse subspecialties of clinical medicine. The journal publishes concise, innovative, and exciting research articles as well as clinically significant articles and reviews that are pertinent to the myriad of disciplines within medicine. The articles published are relevant to both primary care physicians and specialists. The journal's full-texts are archived in PubMed Central and indexed in PubMed. Please consider submitting your manuscripts for publication to our journal and check us out on-line!
