

Special Issue

Review Special Issue Series: Cardiovascular Complications in the Long-COVID: Prevalence, Diagnosis, Management, and Prevention

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue aims to explore the impact of COVID-19 on the cardiovascular system and shed light on the clinical management strategies employed to mitigate cardiovascular complications in patients with long COVID. COVID-19 has been associated with various cardiovascular complications, leading to increased morbidity and mortality in affected individuals. This Special Issue aims to focus on connecting experts in the field to present their latest research findings, clinical insights, and evidence-based recommendations related to cardiovascular complications in patients with long COVID. Additionally, preventive measures and strategies to mitigate the long-term cardiovascular effects of COVID-19 will be discussed. This Special Issue aims to provide a platform for communication between researchers and healthcare professionals so as to better understand and address the cardiovascular implications of long COVID, ultimately improving patient outcomes. We look forward to receiving excellent reviews and articles from experts in the field and providing readers with valuable insights.
