Treatment for Hepatocellular Carcinoma: Recent Advances, Current Concepts and Future Trends

Message from the Guest Editor

Hepatocellular carcinoma (HCC) accounts for the majority of primary liver cancer cases, which is the fourth leading cause of cancer-related death globally. HCC is associated with chronic inflammation with cirrhosis caused by hepatitis B and C virus, alcohol or fatty liver disease, and many cases are potentially preventable. Earlier detection and improvements in diagnosis, staging, molecular classification, surgery, non-surgical ablative procedures and management of co-morbidities are among measures to improve the outcome. New knowledge of the molecular basis of the disease has recently led to development of several targeted treatments and immunotherapy with an impact on the prognosis of patients with advanced disease. With this Special Issue, we hope to encourage submissions that discuss the current state of the art, address ongoing knowledge gaps, and focus on ongoing controversies related to treatment of HCC.
