Clinical Trends and Prospects in Laboratory Hematology

Message from the Guest Editor

Nowadays, we observe extreme progress in the development of laboratory hematology. All clinical decisions for patients with hematological disorders have to be based on the results of laboratory investigations, including basic tests like complete blood count and hemostatic tests through specialized flow cytometric or electrophoretic analyses to personalized molecular diagnostics. Clinical laboratory specialists working in the field of laboratory hematology put huge effort into providing comprehensive, detailed, and precise laboratory test results in the shortest possible time. Advances in laboratory hematology are not fully recognized by clinicians; thus, we should widely present actual possibilities of laboratory medicine and bring the recent achievements in the hematological field closer to clinics. In this Special Issue, we welcome authors to submit papers on the latest advances in all areas of laboratory hematology, including the clinical evaluation of new methods and laboratory equipment as well as clinical studies based on laboratory evaluation.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

There has been an explosion of gene and target based research and therapeutics in the multitude of fields that compose clinical medicine. The Journal of Clinical Medicine's (JCM) staff and editorial board are dedicated to providing cutting edge, timely, and peer-reviewed articles covering the diverse subspecialties of clinical medicine. The journal publishes concise, innovative, and exciting research articles as well as clinically significant articles and reviews that are pertinent to the myriad of disciplines within medicine. The articles published are relevant to both primary care physicians and specialists. The journal's full-texts are archived in PubMed Central and indexed in PubMed. Please consider submitting your manuscripts for publication to our journal and check us out on-line!
