New Frontiers in Hepatocellular Carcinoma: Diagnosis, Treatment and Management

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue focuses on the current role of surgery in the treatment of hepatocellular carcinoma, based on liver transplantation, liver resection and intraoperative tumor ablation. We are particularly interested in clinical evidence regarding how far we can extend the indications for surgery in terms of disease presentation and technical aspects, and, on the other hand, regarding presentations where other treatments, such as percutaneous tumor ablation or stereotactic radiotherapy, may replace surgery. We are also interested in new developments in the research concerning this disease, such as new biomarkers, which would further optimize the indications for surgery and the follow-up after surgical treatments.
