Impact of COVID-19 Pandemic on Global Diseases and Human Well-Being

Message from the Guest Editor

The wide spread of COVID-19 has had significant and negative effects on human well-being, but it has also had a negative impact on many important diseases. It has necessitated a major reorganisation of emergency care facilities to accommodate the additional workload anticipated with the rapid surge in critically ill patients with COVID-19. Previous reports have demonstrated a reduction in admissions for different conditions like acute coronary syndrome or decreased use of coronary procedures in various countries affected by the COVID-19 pandemic, leading to an increase in out-of-hospital deaths and long-term complications of myocardial infarction and missed opportunities to offer secondary prevention treatment for patients with coronary heart disease. In this context, we do not know what impacts these events may have had in psychology and sexuality. In this Special Issue, we invite researchers and clinicians to submit their works, including original clinical research studies, meta-analyses, and systematic reviews, that will provide additional knowledge on the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on global diseases and human well-being.
