

Special Issue

Novelties in Marine Propulsion

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to gather the latest developments in marine propulsion research, covering a broad spectrum of topics related to the presentation of novel propulsive concepts, the modeling, design, simulation, and testing of propulsive systems, including turbomachinery, energy generation and transfer, experimental verification, and validation, advances in numerical modeling and simulation and methodological approaches. Authors are encouraged to submit original research articles or systematic review papers, not strictly limited to the following list of exemplary topics:

- Hydrodynamic and propulsive modeling and design of marine propulsors (propellers, waterjets, etc.);
- Novel numerical approaches for design, analysis, and simulation;
- Experimental campaigns and innovations in test techniques;
- Energy conversion and storage for propulsion;
- Multidisciplinary design and optimization;
- Propulsion system integration and novel propulsive configurations;
- Engine control system;
- Propulsion-related pollutants modeling and abatement.
