New Advances in Marine Engineering Geology

Message from the Guest Editors

ISMEG 2019 will invite top researchers worldwide to submit papers, share their research outcomes, and report recent advancements on the key topics mentioned previously. It is expected to receive more than 50 contributions from high-profile senior academic researchers and young researchers, on the basis of previous experience. The objective of this Special Issue is to publish high-quality papers from ISMEG 2019 participants. The submitted papers will go through JMSE peer-review process, like regular papers. It is believed that this Special Issue will provide a timely overview of marine engineering geology and geotechnics of recent cases, theoretical advances, laboratory and field testing, design methods, and the potential for further development of these disciplines. Moreover, with a timely and well-organized publication, the state-of-the-art data, analyses, and methodologies presented in this Special Issue could be of great interest to all the readers of Journal of Marine Science and Engineering.
