Personalized Medicine in Cardiovascular and Metabolic Diseases

Message from the Guest Editor

The Special Issue aims to highlight cutting-edge research, clinical studies, and technological innovations that drive the development and implementation of personalized medicine in cardiovascular and metabolic care. We welcome original research articles and reviews that explore a wide range of topics, including but not limited to:

- Genomic and epigenomic predictors of cardiovascular and metabolic risk;
- Multi-omics integration for disease stratification and therapeutic targeting;
- Al and machine learning tools in personalized risk assessment and decision-making;
- Novel biomarkers for individualized therapy monitoring;
- Pharmacogenomics and tailored pharmacologic interventions:
- Precision approaches to diabetes, obesity, dyslipidemia, and hypertension;
- Sex-specific and ancestry-informed strategies in cardiometabolic health:
- Personalized prevention and digital therapeutics in population health.

All manuscripts will undergo rigorous peer review and be published open access, ensuring broad visibility and impact. Join us in shaping the future of precision medicine in cardiovascular and metabolic disease care.
