Dermatology: Diagnosis and Personalized Treatment

Message from the Guest Editors

Dermatology is the medical branch that studies the skin, dealing with the diagnosis, treatment, and prevention of diseases and disorders that affect the skin, hair, nails, and mucous membranes. The large variety of causes and triggers behind these types of health issues represents a challenge for both clinicians and researchers: first, in finding the right diagnosis, and second, in choosing the most suitable treatment option for the patient. In this light, we value new research that refines the diagnostic process and enhances diagnostic accuracy for a tailored treatment. Therefore, up-to-date, high-quality studies, including original research and reviews, that may offer a therapeutic approach that is personalized to the needs of the patient are welcome for submission. By contributing to this Special Issue, you will help expand the body of knowledge in dermatology and encourage the exchange of valuable insights within the scientific community.
