Advances in Personalized Treatment of Cancer (Powered By: 4oncommunity)

Message from the Guest Editors

We are experiencing an amazing era of advances in the diagnosis and treatment of cancer. In this evolving scenario, predictive molecular pathology is called to face new challenges. Our increased diagnostic resolution, coupled with the integration of clinicopathologic information, and big molecular data, is allowing for a growth in the selective capacity of molecular targeted treatments. Novel biomarkers at genomic, transcriptomic, proteomic, and immunologic levels have been discovered, and more accurate testing methods and guidelines are expected. These biomarkers are strongly impacting treatment decision making in patients with cancer. This Special Issue is edited by the Scientific Board of 4oncommunity (www.4oncommunity.com Twitter: @4oncommunity) to provide a comprehensive portrait of the current state of knowledge of biomarkers for the clinical management of cancer patients. One of the aims of this initiative is to foster a novel approach in collaborating between scientists working on cancer. We especially welcome review articles (either systematic or discursive), original translational research studies, and short communications.
