Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue will publish research that supports the progress of non-financial blockchain applications, as such uses may have a greater impact in the long run compared to cryptocurrencies, which have been more thoroughly investigated. We invite papers that explore how to overcome the technological and socio-economic challenges and limitations of blockchain and how it can shape innovation and competition in digital platforms, as well as advancements of applications including but not limited to environmental accounting, access to supply chain finance for smallholder farms in the agri-food sector, credential dissemination for higher education, business-to-business cross-border trade and logistics, supply chain management, tracking of intellectual property, blockchain-based e-voting, personal identity security, and government record security. We welcome novel interdisciplinary approaches in blockchain research that draw from several disciplines, including but not limited to computer science, operations management and information systems, statistics, game theory, economics, and law.
