

Special Issue

Emerging Trends in Global Trade and Policy Dynamics

Message from the Guest Editor

The world is increasingly interconnected and interdependent through complex economic and political relations. This Special Issue aims to publish a collection of high-quality papers addressing recent research advances in the broad topic of “International Economics and Economic Policy”. Both theoretical and empirical papers developing and applying novel methods, as well as review articles addressing in depth the recent research advances in the field, are welcome. Contributions focusing on the interactions between heterogeneous agents in the international perspective, as well as new economic environments such as climate change, and their economic effects are particularly encouraged.
