

Special Issue

Risk Behavior and Health

Message from the Guest Editors

Uncertainty plays an essential role in many health-related decisions. The aim of this issue is to propose theories and/or empirical analyses that contribute to a better understanding of health decisions in risky situations. We welcome papers on topics associated with personal health insurance decisions, the identification of moral hazard or adverse selection, how financial and economic variables cause (or are affected by) health insurance, and any other topic that explores the relationship between financial variables and risky decisions on health.
