

Special Issue

Recent Developments in Finance and Economic Growth

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue invites scholarly contributions that examine recent developments in the financial system and their implications for economic growth. The implications of such developments on a broad range of topics such as access to the capital market, capital formation, human capital, employment, total factor productivity, entrepreneurial activity, firm-level production and innovation, international capital flows, income distribution, and poverty will be considered. Further, papers examining the institutional, political, cultural, and regulatory determinants of such developments and their implications for economic growth will be considered.
