Advances in International Economics

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue in the Journal of Risk and Financial Management welcomes original theoretical and empirical contributions on topics in international trade and international finance, pertaining to developed and developing economies. In particular, the journal aims to present policy papers that apply novel estimation techniques to address current transnational issues in trade and FDI flows, interest rates and exchange rates, exchange rate movements and inflation, choice of exchange rate regimes, effectiveness of monetary and fiscal policies in stabilizing exchange rate fluctuations, exchange rate volatility and external debt, and effects of demographic changes on interest rates, exchange rates, and FDI flows. Empirical papers must have strong theoretical foundations. All contributions will be subject to double-blind peer review.
