Message from the Guest Editors

The Special Issue will be particularly focused on original contributions to local case studies, community-based initiatives, and tourism theory. Potential topics include but are not limited to:

- Connections between land uses and concepts of inclusion, resilience, and other ideas to the local economy, governance, or society;
- Lessons learned from multi- or transdisciplinary perspectives and reconciliations of concepts from different disciplines as applied to non-urban community organizations and perspectives;
- Modern trends in rural geography and regional development;
- Planning and policy of vendors and marketplaces and their broader connections to land use;
- Role of rural tourism in the sustainability principles: worldwide examples and comparisons;
- Rural geographical research fostering resilience in the face of rural communities' problems and events;
- Stakeholder involvement in the rural economy and community-based development;
- The evolution and future of vendors and/or marketplaces with implications for land use;
- The processes of assessing rural strategies' contributions to sustainability.
